Enough!

I think that the terms of the settlement are sufficient and tough enough on Microsoft, and they are fair.

I think that we are circling the vultures that are trying to profit from this. The ingrown toenails of the legal battlers should receive another salve besides continuing to fan the flames of media controversy.

I think not putting an end to this, will stifle the productive output of Microsoft, which makes products that keep a huge number of other companies generating income and employing millions of workers because of this.

If the legal wranglers of this case are latched on to gaining personal wealth for themselves, or are grandstanding for the benefit of keeping their elected positions, don't recognize that we are tired of this and should go on to other endeavors that produce a more positive output, then our country will continue to be victimized by vultures.
